During the week ending December 11, no less than 32 union and other labor organizations added their contributions to the many already received. The CRDC plans to extend the fight for unconditional pardon of the 18, 6 of whom terminated their sentences, and for repeal of the anti-labor Smith "Gag" Act.

Encouraging and sympathetic letters have accompanied the contributions. A typical letter comes from Irving Rosenberg, Business Manager of CIO United Retail Employees Local 108, Newark, N. J. "Enclosed you will find our contribution to the victims of the Smith 'Gag' Act. We extend our sympathy to the families of these victims and have done all that was possible for us to do in protesting the railroading of these pioneers for Trade Union Democracy."

"Enclosed find check to be used as Christmas cheer for the imprisoned brothers, wives and their families. We hope that by next year at this time the 12 still behind bars will be on the battle line again firing against the enemy," says the letter from Brotherhood of Railway Carmen Lodge 652, Reading, Pa.

Spurious Munition 'Shortage'
Used As Labor-Baiting Pretext

By R. Bell

One week following the national elections, Administration spokesmen began using an alleged munitions shortage as the springboard to launch a new labor-baiting campaign. This campaign is mounting in fury with every passing day.

The anti-labor campaign coincided with the launching of the Sixth War Bond drive. To stimulate the sale of bonds General Eisenhower issued a statement deploring the "optimism" of the home front and warning that a shortage of munitions was delaying the offensive. It was alleged that the shortage was so acute that shells had to be "rationed." How explain this "shortage" that suddenly occurred immediately after the elections? The war leaders always have a ready answer to such embarrassing questions.

"Workers who quit critical war jobs," ranted "Commander-in-Chief" Roosevelt, "were costing American lives on the battlefronts because it was necessary to ration shells hurled at the enemy." This was the cue the labor-baiters were waiting for. The rabid labor-hating head of the Army Service Forces, General Somervell, stumped the country slandering and vilifying the workers in speeches before various employers groups and associations. "The war end is being delayed," declared Somervell aping Roosevelt, "because thousands of men have left the shipyards, the forges and foundries, and because thousands of others have sought employment away from other war industries where production is lagging."

Believing that the war was almost over, the brass hats ended

PLANT SHUTDOWNS

It was on the basis of this "optimism" of the General Staff, that the Army and Navy initiated a program of contract cancellations, drastic cutbacks and plant shutdowns that closed numerous munitions plants. The workers were given a "furlough" which threw them onto the streets to shift for themselves.

After dragging on for nearly 8 months, the Roosevelt government's burlesque trial of 25 American fascists and pro-Hitlerites fizzled out completely with a declaration of a mistrial last week by Associate Justice James M. Proctor of the Federal District Court in Washington. Justice Proctor's decision followed the refusal of most of the defendants to agree to a continuance of the trial under a new judge after the death of Chief Justice Edward C. Elchir before whom the case was being tried.

The trial had been preceded by tremendous ballyhoo, with the government threatening to deal firmly and sternly with the fascists. But from the beginning, the fascist defendants were permitted to turn the trial into a farce.

A battery of 20 high-priced defense lawyers used every device to stall and prolong the trial indefinitely, while the defendants contemptuously put on a variety of publicity stunts right in the courtroom. The government prosecutors and Judge tried very gently where the fascists' "legal rights" were concerned.

Roosevelt and his Justice Department were not so solicitous about the rights of the anti-fascist labor defendants in the Minneapolis Labor Case. The government moved with ruthless speed and shovved through a frameup conviction in five weeks against the Trotskyists and CIO truckdrivers leaders who were indicted under the infamous Smith "Gag" Act because of their militant defense of labor's rights and socialism.

300,000 WORKERS

Who are these workers, estimated at 300,000, who decided to "retire" and live off the interest of their debts right in the middle of the war? "They are the members of the group of optimists," says Somervell, "who have already guessed that the war is about over . . . They have taken a furlough or have come to believe their term of enlistment is over." What is the source of this deplorable "optimism" against which Generals Eisenhower and Somervell rail and thunder?

The N. Y. Times military analyst, Hanson Baldwin, traces the source directly to the Roosevelt administration and its military leaders. "The people have taken their cue from their leaders" he says, "and especially their military leaders." To prove this contention he adds: "Admiral William F. Halsey's famous prediction about the end of the Japanese war led the list of optimistic 'boners,' but Gen. H. Arnold has not been far behind; he has 'destroyed' most of Germany's economy many times and is engaged in doing the same thing for Japan. Gen. Douglas MacArthur's communiques speak for themselves, they have often been prematurely and overly optimistic."

"Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's hopes of ending the European war in 1944 misled many people and even Gen. Geo. C. Marshall, in a recent article, written some and socialism.

Clayton's world's largest cotton combine, according to the findings of the LaFollette Senate Civil Liberties Committee, maintained the notorious "farm labor bureaus" in Arizona and California which lured thousands of impoverished farm workers into the cotton fields of the Pacific Coast to drive down wage standards and then left them stranded after the season. Clayton's representatives helped organize and were among the largest financial supporters of the labor-hating "Associated Farmers" of California, the big business vigilante organization which broke strikes and spread bloody terror amongst the union agricultural workers.

TRADE UNION NOTES

By Joseph Keller

The recent American Federation of Labor convention witnessed a sharp disagreement between the AFL chiefs and their guests from the British Trades Union Congress. This controversy between the two leading sections of the International Federation of Trade Unions occurred over the British organization's sponsorship of a "World Labor Conference" to be held next month in London. It is reported as a move to establish a new international union organization which will include the CIO and the Soviet "trade unions." The AFL tops vigorously opposed having any truck with either the CIO or the Soviet bodies.

It is no news that the AFL heads, guardians of the narrow precincts of craft-unionism, jealously refuse to "recognize" the CIO. For years the AFL leaders have blocked participation by the CIO in either the IFTU or the International Labor Office, a government-sponsored agency whose "labor" representatives are appointed by the respective capitalist governments. The constitution of the IFTU gives representation priority to the major and oldest organization in a given country. On this ground, the IFTU has persistently refused to share representation in the IFTU with the CIO.

The claim of the craft-union moguls is that participation with the CIO in any organization constitutes support of "dual unionism." Their real objection, of course, is that the CIO represents industrial unionism, against which the craft-union vested interests have fought with consuming hatred.

These AFL objections, however cut no ice with the British union heads and the Roosevelt and Churchill regimes which have given tacit blessing to the London conference. The latter recognize the CIO as the most decisive union in America, whose leadership is utterly subservient to the dictates of Allied imperialism.

The proposal to collaborate formally with the Stalinist trade union bureaucrats in the Soviet Union was especially objectionable to the AFL leaders. Their alleged objections were stated most sharply by Daniel J. Tobin, AFL Teamsters Czar and one of Roosevelt's most devoted labor servants. Referring to the Soviet "trade unions," Tobin piously protested before the AFL convention that he would not "sit down at the same table with labor organizations that are not free — whose wages are set by the government."

Tobin's sanctimonious utterance is, of course, pure fraud. He simply skipped like a ballerina over Roosevelt's wage-freeze and Little Steel Formula. Tobin himself, together with all the AFL and CIO bureaucrats, has upheld the principle of government "wage-stabilization," that is, the fixing of maximum wage scales by government decree.

Moreover, there has been a powerful trend, accelerated by the imperialist war, for all the

SWP Opens $18,000 Fund Drive In Big Party Expansion Program

$18,000 Party Expansion Fund

A Fitting Welcome to Our 18 Class-War Prisoners

By Rose Karsner, Campaign Director

In the words of Comrade Cannon: "People cannot live without perspectives, without hope for the future... The greatest power of Marxism derives from the fact that it gives a rational basis to the impulse of the masses to make a better world; a scientific assurance that the irresistible laws of social evolution are working on their side; that the idea of socialism, of the good society of the free and equal, is not a utopian fantasy but the projection of future reality. When this idea takes hold of the people it will truly be the greatest power in the world. It seems somewhat undignified, somewhat lacking in the sense of proportion, for one who has grasped this idea to be deterred or turned aside by such trifles as concern for one's personal fate. What matters, as the Old Man expressed it is 'the consciousness that one participates in the building of a better future, that one carries on his shoulders a particle of the fate of mankind, and that one's life will not have been lived in vain'."

This was the guiding line of our recently concluded convention of the Socialist Workers Party. It was this spirit that motivated the delegates to unanimously pledge the raising of the $18,000 Party Expansion Fund, in spite of the heavy expenses the branches had just been under to finance their delegations. This conviction, that expressed itself in enthusiasm, optimism and confidence at the convention, now assures the success of the Fund Campaign.

THE BRANCHES WRITE

In Cleveland comrade Black put it this way: "The thing that impressed me most was that there were no screwballs in the party — just regular American workers who make any worker feel at home. I feel sure the SWP is going to tear across this country like wildfire. We have absolutely no competition."

O'Connell of Milwaukee says: "Please increase our quota. A canvass of pledges shows a total of over this sum, with one comrade pledging a week's wages."

Local New York organizer Grant states: "Considering the favorable objective situation which makes for the possibility of an immediate expansion of our press and recruitment to our ranks, the members of Local New York are backing the $18,000 Fund with confidence and enthusiasm. We have already oversubscribed our quota and we have a few more pledges to come in. The members of the Maritime Club are setting a fine example by their extraordinary sacrifices. They too expect to go over their quota."

The Boston Fund Director F. Daniels writes: "I should like to inform you that our branch has revised its quota from $300 to $400. We of course expect to exceed this sum."

Newark also revised its quota upwards and tell us: "Most of this sum was subscribed by the members of our Executive Committee. We expect a few more pledges and we have no doubt that we will go over the top."

Buffalo accepts its quota and writes: "We will make every effort to complete it by January 23 to greet the release of our comrades from prison."

Members-at-Large and Friends have made the following pledges:

	Quota	Paid	Percent
Massachusetts	$100	$100	100

"The concrete walls and the steel bars are real. But after all, they are only one kind of prison. There are also the prisons of ignorance and prejudices, of selfishness and of thought limited to the present day. If one sets himself to the task of breaking out of these prisons, if he feels that with every day's work and study he has made a little headway; then time passes and the concrete walls don't crowd in so closely." So writes one of our 18.

And we confidently answer: we feel sure that when you return to our ranks, you will find that our party, "whose members are bound together and inspired by common ideas" has gone forward during your enforced absence. That we are ready to make sacrifices for the party in the same undaunted spirit which characterized your "farewells." That the confidence you have placed in the membership is fully justified.

Forward to a mass revolutionary party!

Forward to a speedy and successful completion of the $18,000 Expansion Fund Campaign as the first step in that direction!

The latest report from our Los Angeles agent is so full of enthusiasm and inspiration that we quote at length.

"We obtained the first two recruits from the subscription campaign last week. Two Negro comrades who saw the paper for the first time with the campaign have decided that their place is with the Party which has the only correct program for the Negro and white workers..."

"One of our comrades decided that it would be a good idea to see if he couldn't get the various newsboys on the street corners to carry The Militant. On his first try six out of nine newsboys accepted the paper. If they continue carrying it, I will give you their locations for an ad."

"I was very glad to see that people are sending in for literature. In response to The Militant ad someone came into the Southside Bookshop the other day and bought $8 worth of literature. 'Things sure look good.'

Letters from our agents in every section report progress and growth.

Minneapolis: "Our list of long-term subscribers is growing. Comrade Field reported last night that we had picked up six new 1-year combination subscriptions during the past month."

Seattle: "The comrades have been selling a lot of literature with the trial subs."

Cleveland: "We had an interesting conversation with a Negro contact of ours who, incidentally, subscribes to The Militant. He told us that when he first began reading our paper he couldn't understand it. This naturally alarmed us since we publish the paper 'in the interest pose.'"

Boston: "In regard to the leaflet about which you asked, we attach such a leaflet to The Militant which is distributed at meetings, factory gates, and even house-to-house (especially if the house-to-house is a special distribution for some specific purpose)."

"Many of the people attending this meeting told our salesman that they had already read these pamphlets and asked if we had any more on the same subject. It looks like the proposed Jackson pamphlet (a compilation of Charles Jackson's writings in the Negro Struggle column) will fill a need."

"Labor Party" Is Forum Topic

"Labor's Need — An Independent Labor Party" is the topic of the Sunday, Dec. 17 forum to be held at 8 p. m. at the New York School of Social Science, 116 University Place.

Roosevelt's appointment of Big Business lieutenants to the State Department, his continuation of the wage freeze, his acquiescence in the Allied shooting of Belgian and Greek workers prove that Wall Street won the last election.

The Milwaukee literature agent writes: "The History of American Trotskyism was well received here. All the comrades had nothing but praise and admiration for the book. Well written, well reasoned and extremely informative."

From Toledo, just three weeks after they had received their books: "We sold out the clothbound copies almost as soon as we got them. Now we have sold most of the paperbound copies. We would like to get five more copies of the clothbound as soon as possible."

Cannon refers to his book in a recent letter: "I see by the N. Y. Times Book Review that a book of Roosevelt's speeches, entitled 'Roosevelt and Destiny' is edited by J. B. S. Hardman. This advertisement struck me as a timely footnote to my remarks about him in my History."

The branches report increasingly good results in selling pamphlets at public meetings, and are particularly successful with the Negro pamphlets.

Boston writes: "Last Sunday A. Clayton Powell spoke in Boston. We covered the meeting with Negro pamphlets and sold 97 of them, the largest sale of pamphlets we have had in the past few years."

Boston continues: "We covered the meeting with Negro pamphlets and sold 97 of them, the largest sale of pamphlets we have had in the past few years."

"Many of the people attending this meeting told our salesman that they had already read these pamphlets and asked if we had any more on the same subject. It looks like the proposed Jackson pamphlet (a compilation of Charles Jackson's writings in the Negro Struggle column) will fill a need."

Despite all this evidence, the hue and cry for drastic action against the unions continues.

Boston continues: "We covered the meeting with Negro pamphlets and sold 97 of them, the largest sale of pamphlets we have had in the past few years."

"Many of the people attending this meeting told our salesman that they had already read these pamphlets and asked if we had any more on the same subject. It looks like the proposed Jackson pamphlet (a compilation of Charles Jackson's writings in the Negro Struggle column) will fill a need."

Despite all this evidence, the hue and cry for drastic action against the unions continues.

ing out with a rhetorical whip to encourage those in his own ranks faint-hearted at the prospect of having to put down the mighty force of the rising proletarian revolution. His speech was a principled exposition from beginning to end — a principled exposition of counter-revolution. "I must point out that it does not only deal with Greece, but with other parts of Europe and with the suppression of these popular movements which have valiantly assisted the defeat of the enemy in other countries besides Greece." What is involved, said Churchill, is "the whole of this question of our intervention in Europe."

Churchill, the old imperialist gangster who organized the Allied intervention against the Bolshevik revolution of October 1917, turned to Belgium as "another case" of "the friends of democracy being disarmed in favor of the organized constitutional government."

SINISTER PROMISE

Contemptuously challenging his "left critics" in Parliament, Churchill ended with a sinister promise: "If I am not dismissed, make no mistake, we shall persist in this policy of clearing Athens and the Athens regions of all rebels to the constitutional government of Greece... I hope I have made the position clear both generally as it affects the world and the war, and Government." Churchill referred to the spilling of workers' blood in Belgium to demonstrate that the British are not alone in the plot to bolster counter-revolution in areas "freed" from the German armies. The orders for this use of force came, Churchill revealed, from General Eisenhower. "I have no hesitation in saying not only did we obey General Eisenhower's orders, but we thought those orders were wise and sound."

JOINT ARRANGEMENT

Churchill further revealed that "We have a joint arrangement with America about Italy." Even in the case of Greece, Roosevelt shares equal responsibility. "At the Quebec conference it was proposed by the combined chiefs of staff

Business Moguls Explode Myth of 60 Million Jobs

Roosevelt Promise of Full Employment Under "Free Enterprise" System Is Gigantic Hoax

By C. Thomas

Capitalist candidates for public office are notorious for making the most extravagant campaign promises in their bid for votes. The recent presidential campaign was no exception. Roosevelt and Dewey vied with each other in promising all things to all men. The master demagogue in the White House has made and broken so many promises in his four campaigns that probably felt that one more whopper wouldn't make much difference. And so, in his Chicago speech last October, he topped off by promising 60-million jobs "after the war." That figure is 5-million more than were employed during the peak of wartime production and 7-million more than are employed today. Obviously some very radical changes will have to be made in our economic system to even approximate the promised number of jobs Roosevelt so glibly rolled off his tongue in Chicago. How did he propose to implement his promise?

In the same speech, the fourth term candidate expounded his creed: "I believe in free enterprise — and always have. I believe in the profit system — and always have. I believe that private enterprise can give full employment to our people." Roosevelt advanced his creed as an expression of "faith" in the ability of "private enterprise" to provide 60-million jobs. Nothing is to change. Big Business is to be given a free hand to perform "miracles" of production. But Hoover also had faith in miracles. The profit-mongering capitalists were turned loose after the last war to produce "miracles" and succeeded only in producing the most profound economic crisis in history. If the so-called free private enterprise — in which Roosevelt says he "always" believed — can give full employment "after the war" why didn't it do so before?

PUPPET'S CHORUS

The devout labor bureaucrats share Roosevelt's "faith" in the profit system. Like a well trained choir they have responded to their cue and are singing hosannas to an era of "free enterprise" prosperity buttressed by Roosevelt's 60-million jobs. The Stalinists, of course, reinforce the Gospel of Teheran with Roosevelt's revelation. This puppet's chorus is intended to drown out the growing clamor for wage increases NOW to meet the rising cost of living.

CAMPAIGN ORATORY

The liberals are a little more reticent. While they hail Roosevelt as the "greatest liberal of them all" they hedge his promise around with a number of ifs, ands, and buts. Thus the editors of the New Republic, writing on "prosperity and how to get it" say: "The only way to keep purchasing power growing is to pay higher wages or charge lower prices, or both... If employers follow the policy of passing on to workers and consumers the gain from technological advance, all is well... If private enterprise is to bring full employment without much governmental assistance, it must turn over a new leaf in this respect. It must consent to the abolition of all monopolistic practices. In cases where monopoly does not exist, but where the price policy is decided by big corporations, these corporations must promptly pass on to the workers and consumers all gains in efficiency of production." And so on and so forth. Such monopolists and corporations exist only in the liberal never-never land.

In contrast to the labor skates and liberal muddleheads the "free serving the interests of his billionaire family as co-ordinator of Latin American affairs for the State Department. His elevation to an Assistant Secretaryship provides the Rockefellers with a direct representative who will look after their world affairs, just as Stettinius will keep an eye on the interests of the competing Morgan financial dynasty.

Former Ambassador to Japan Joseph C. Grew is a professional State Department career man. In a speech on December 29, 1943, Grew spoke for preserving the top ruling class of Japan. "I know that many of the highest statesmen of Japan, including the Emperor himself, were laboring earnestly but futilely to control the military in order to avoid war with the U.S.A. and Britain..." Roosevelt's appointments to the Families.

Capitalists themselves frankly dismiss Roosevelt's promise as so much campaign oratory. The December bulletin of the National City Bank asserts that the goal of 60-million jobs is a fantastic figure impossible of realization in the foreseeable future under the "free enterprise" system. This Wall Street bank expresses alarm that: "Positive harm may be done by setting employment goals at higher figures than are sound or reasonable. Both business and the public may be misled."

A recent issue of The Guaranty Survey, bulletin of the Guaranty Trust Company, another Wall Street bank, explodes the myth of "reconversion" to prosperity when it says: "The war boom has obscured but not altered the fact that the depression which began with the stock market crash in 1929 was still present when the war broke out ten years later, and that the war has postponed but not necessarily solved the problem of sound and lasting recovery."

NAM CONVENTION

At the recent "War and Reconstruction" Congress of American Industry held by the National Association of Manufacturers, Robert Gaylord, president of the association scoffed at predictions that the present national income will be maintained "after the war." At a recent union convention, he said, "labor" was told that the nation could produce a $200-billion income "with 60,000,000 jobs at forty hours a week." Gaylord then proceeded to demolish the fiction of "full employment" under capitalism.

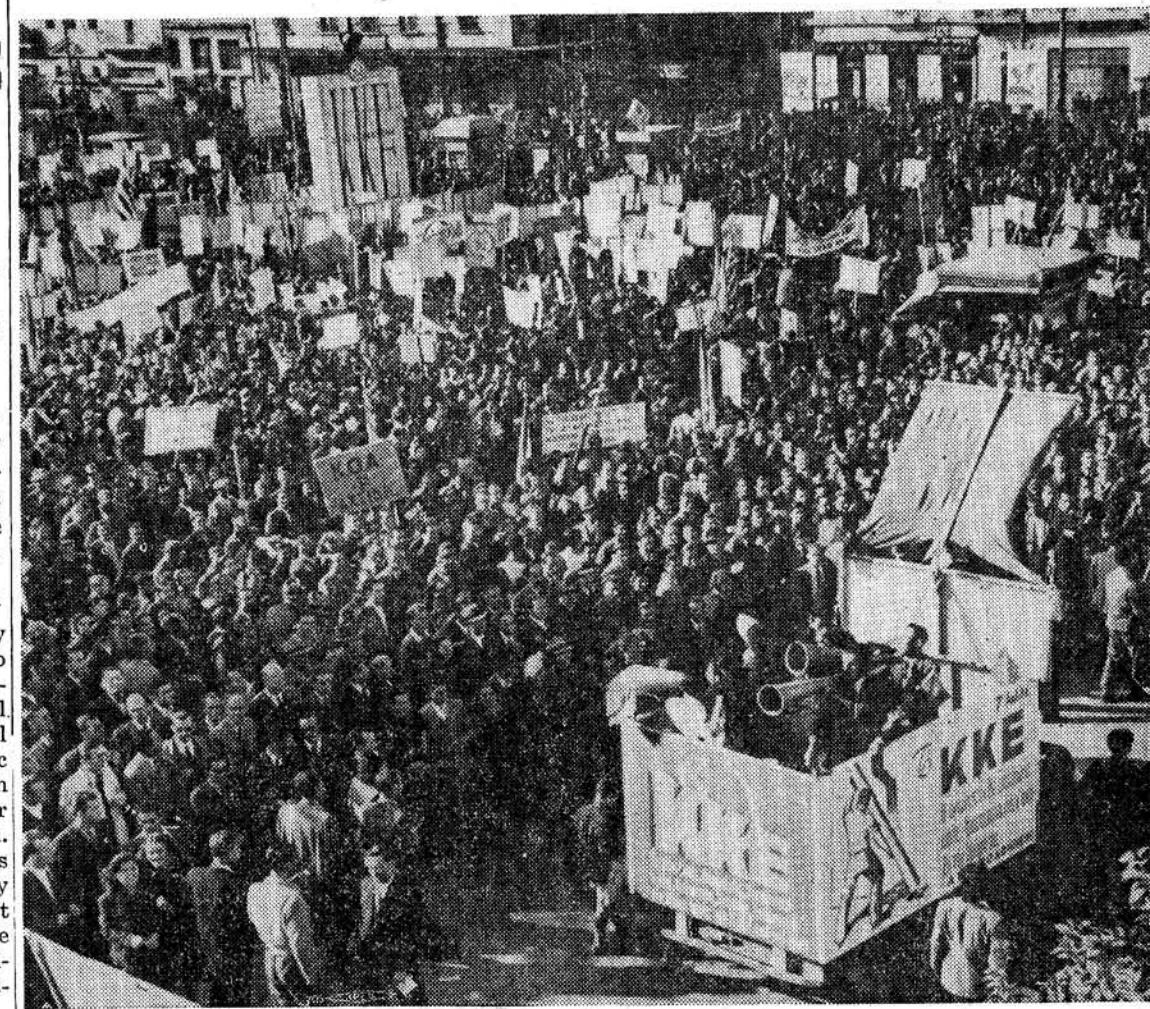

"Let's look at the facts," he declared. "In 1929, 48,000,000 people worked a little more than forty-eight hours a week and there were virtually no unemployed. That was 2,304 million hours a week and it produced a national income of $83,000,000,000. Now, it is said, that 2,400 million hours a week, or only 4 percent more than we worked in 1929, can produce 240 percent more national income."

"Let's think straight. Are we talking $200,000,000,000 real dollars or 50-cent dollars? If they are real dollars, we shall have to buy and build production on facilities far more efficient than we now have. This will take time, investment and hard work. Everybody is for that high income — but it will not be realized by wishful thinking."

WISHFUL THINKING

The "hard-headed" business men do not indulge in the fantasy of "wishful thinking" nor do they share the faith of the Stalinists, labor bureaucrats and liberals. The promise of 60-million jobs under capitalism is a gigantic hoax. The war has served to tighten the grip of monopoly on the economic life of the nation. The monopolists are not interested in creating jobs — but only in profits. "They can't afford to put people to work," says the National City Bank bulletin, "simply to provide a market for the products of other producers; they can only produce what they can sell, and in the long run sell at a profit."

The picture shows one section of more than 50,000 workers who gathered December 3 to celebrate the 26th anniversary of the Greek Communist Party. The treacherous role of the Stalinists in paving the way for the British invasion will now become clearer to the Greek masses.

Canadians Struggle Against King's Conscription Betrayal

By Alexander

drafftees overseas was rejected by Mr. King.

The double flip that Mr. King offered his Canadian audience was this: "First, we will give the old barrel another working over. We will transfer everyone but the halt and the lame and the blind in home units of the Active Army to overseas service, and then, if we are still short on the needed 16,000 reinforcements, we will fill the gaps from the Home Defense conscriptives."

All that double-talk boiled down simply to the fact that the great bulk of the needed reinforcements will come from the men who were conscripted for Home Defense and whom Mr. King had solemnly promised he would not send overseas. It was clear to everyone that he had double-crossed his French-Canadian followers.

Quickly Air Minister Power, who represents a Quebec constituency, resigned his post: for the opposite reason that led to Ralston's earlier resignation. Upon the day that Mr. King announced his stab-in-the-back for Quebec, four of his supporters from that province joined the opposition ranks. As this is written, Liberal ranks are seething.

At the cost of splitting his party, Mr. King at least removed the wind from the swollen Conservative sails. It is doubtful that they will dare vote against him when he puts his new policy to the test in parliament. But what of the parties of the left?"

The Stalinists, as usual, rushed to Mr. King's rescue. When they arrived in their rowboat supporting his first tentative plan of "voluntary" reinforcements he had already climbed aboard his "Zombie" ship. For the records, here are a couple of excerpts from the declaration of the National Executive of the Labor-Progressive (Stalinist) Party.

"The National Executive... recognizes that the stand taken by the Prime Minister is the one which, in the existing situation, best meets the needs and the real interests of Canada. We therefore endorse his stand and pledge our unequivocal support to the effort to secure adequate reinforcements through the voluntary system."

"We were compelled to restudy the question because until now we have advocated total war policies including universal application of the selective draft for overseas service."

THE CCF

As for the CCF leaders, they have maintained silence on the issue. Too often, rank-and-file CCFers are shown that their leaders regard principles the way they regard a suit of clothes; something to be worn for an occasion. For the first days of the crisis, all that Mr. Coldwell could offer was that he was "studying the situation," he had to "examine the documents" in the case.

In the past the CCF adopted the position: No conscription of manpower without conscription of wealth. Mr. Coldwell and the party leaders have conveniently forgotten that slogan. It was left to demonstrating Home Defense units at Vernon B.C. to shame them by using the CCF slogan in a parade of protest against the King policy. Mr. Coldwell contented himself with a complaint about "coercion" in securing the transfer of conscripts to active units.

King's open betrayal of French Canada has given the CCF a valuable weapon in winning the potentially most revolutionary section of the country to its banner. The fact that the slogan of "no conscription of manpower without conscription of wealth" was raised by English-Canadian units of the Home Defense army shows that this demand has more than a sectional appeal. Right now the CCF has its greatest opportunity to sink its roots deep into the anti-war masses, already disillusioned by the cynical power politics of Canadian capitalism.

British Tories Backed Bloody Metaxas Regime

By Joseph Hansen

The civil war raging today in Greece between the workers and peasants on one side, the bankers, industrialists and landowners on the other has smoldered for decades, sporadically breaking into flame. The influence of world imperialism has decisively influenced this struggle.

The conflict between German and British imperialism shaped the Greek capitalist class like the symmetrical halves of a twin crystal. Greece ordered naval craft from British shipyards, trained her seamen in the British tradition. She ordered armaments from Germany, sent her officers to German military schools and built her army in the Prussian tradition.

Britain, nevertheless, controlled Greece much as Wall Street has controlled some of the Latin American "republics." She has foisted five different monarchs on Greece. Three of these monarchs were dethroned once, one was dethroned twice, one was assassinated, and only one died in office—three years after coronation. The Glucksburg dynasty owes its uneasy throne to Britain and to no one else despite its inter-marriage with the Hohenzollerns of Germany.

KAISER'S NEPHEW

The present king, George II, is a nephew of Kaiser Wilhelm. He was excluded from the throne following World War I because of pro-German intrigues at the outbreak of the conflict. However, he was educated in England and was an intimate of the royal British family. Finally enthroned in 1922, he fled for his life in 1923. The hated Glucksburg dynasty was expelled by the Greek people in 1924 and the king was exiled.

The destitute masses, suffering from over-population, lack of land, a feeble, narrow economy, unemployment, starvation, disease, the closing of all avenues of emigration, strove for a political solution to the chronic economic crisis. Dozens of parties sprang into existence. The political atmosphere grew hot, the masses moved leftward, especially after the world economic crisis of 1929. The workers and peasants of Greece were turning to the example of the October 1917 Bolshevik revolution.

The Greek capitalists feared a workers' revolution in Greece just as their class brothers feared revolution in Spain. In 1935, with the help of British imperialism and a sham plebiscite, George II was restored to the throne. The Kaiser's nephew constituted the pivot around which the capitalists hoped to establish a counter-revolutionary regime.

The king appointed as premier John Metaxas, former vice-president of Greece, who had been known in German military academies as "The Little Moltke." In the previous elections Metaxas had received 49,740 votes out of 1,119,350. His party held only 7 seats out of 300 in parliament.

On August 4, 1936—only shortly after Franco's bid for power in Spain—in response to a general strike called for the following day, Metaxas declared martial law, dissolved parliament and constitutional government in accordance with a decree signed by George II and banned political parties. "Liberty," he remarked, "is a nineteenth century illusion."

WORLD HORRIFIED

Within two days 600 political opponents of Metaxas were under arrest. By December 1937 an estimated 13,000 were suffering on penal islands of the Aegean. They were imprisoned by simple decree without even the formality of trial. Five cents a day was the maximum allotted them for subsistence. Thousands died from cold, hunger and lack of water. The treatment of Metaxas opponents horrified the world. Their feet and heads were crushed in a vice. Fatal doses of castor oil were given workers accused of Communist beliefs. Suspects were brutally beaten and murdered. Women were violated and then subjected to hideous and unspeakable tortures.

The police who carried out these assignments were handpicked by Metaxas and organized on the model of Hitler's Gestapo. These same police served later under the Nazi occupation. They are tools today of the Papandreou cabinet and were the ones who opened fire on the unarmed demonstrators of Athens last week.

Metaxas abolished elections, outlawed trade unions, forbade teaching constitutional law, banned study of Sophocles, Thucydides and other classics, silenced all "subversive hymns of democracy" such as Lincoln's Gettysburg address, imposed rigorous internal censorship of mail, burned more than 300 standard works of authors such as Marx, Freud, Darwin, Tolstoy, Dostoevsky, Kant, Spinoza, Gide.

He converted the press into a house organ of his counter-revolutionary dictatorship.

CAPITALISTS WAX FAT

He set up a system of tolls on transportation of merchandise from one city to another. Exorbitant tariffs swelled the profits of Greek manufacturers. Government subsidies further enriched the landowners. The Greek merchant marine became a byword for low wages and vicious working conditions, while inflated rates increased the profits of shipowners.

The cost of living skyrocketed; wages plummeted downward. Metaxas, backed by the big banks and British imperialism, ruled on the model of Hitler and Mussolini. Lacking a mass base such as they at first enjoyed, his regime rested solely on the bayonets of the army and the police, a vast network of espionage, the most brutal use of terror. Bankers, industrialists and landowners had won for the time being. "Metaxas had exorcised the spectre of Bolshevism." Like Franco in Spain he had "put a stop to labor troubles." Metaxas ordered the people "to abandon all hope of an eventual return to democratic forms."

Churchill is now trying to re-establish this very same monarchist dictatorship in Greece as the "legal" government.

MASSES REBEL

Despite sporadic manifestations of public opposition, not until the German invasion and the fleeing of George II into the arms of his British sponsors did the masses find opportunity to begin settling accounts. No sooner did they take up arms against the German armies, than they began purging their native oppressors, many of whom had remained as quislings to represent the interests of Greek capitalism during German occupation.

The bitterness of the masses toward the ruling class was forcefully demonstrated in the mutinies of the Greek army and navy in April of this year. An entire brigade stationed near Alexandria, Egypt, refused to take orders from Greek Monarchist officers. Sailors in Greek warships at Alexandria formed ship committees to take charge of the vessels. More than 6 per cent of the Greek army abroad and almost the entire navy joined the rebellion.

BLOODY SUPPRESSION

Churchill on May 24 described in Parliament how the British put down this rebellion: "The... Greek ships... were lying under the guns of both shore batteries and our superior naval forces... The disorderly ships were boarded by Greeks under the Greek government, and, with about fifty killed and wounded, the mutineers were collected and sent ashore. The mutinous brigade in the desert were assaulted by superior British forces which captured the eminences surrounding the camp, and 4,000 men there surrendered."

From these facts it is clear that the present Papandreou government, which is provoking civil war, is simply trying to repeat what Metaxas did in 1936. Then the masses were unarmed, now they are armed. Then the monarchy rested on a well-groomed army, now it depends almost exclusively on British troops. In 1936 Britain remained like a sinister shadow in the background. In 1944 British imperialism stands openly as the most powerful supporter of reaction, seeking to anchor its economic and military interests in Greece by once more imposing a counter-revolutionary government on the Greek people.

WLB Decision, Called "Great Victory" By Murray, Gives Steel Workers Only Crumbs

By R. Wilson

YOUNGSTOWN, O.—After stalling the wage demands of the steel workers for over eleven months, the War Labor Board finally issued its steel wage decision. The WLB directive was hailed by Murray as "one of the greatest victories in labor's history." This contention would lead one to believe that the wage freezing WLB had changed its anti-labor spots and is now a "pro-labor" board. But how does all this boasting by Murray square with the facts? What concretely have the steel workers gained under the WLB directive?

The demand for an hourly wage increase of 17 cents was rejected as a violation of the Little Steel formula. The union admitted that the WLB had no authority to grant this increase and asked only that the board "recommend" that Roosevelt revise the wage freezing formula. This the WLB refused to do. The demand for an hourly wage increase is back where it started from—in Roosevelt's lap.

The grant of shift differentials is the only real gain made by the steel workers. But workers in other industries, such as auto, have had this long ago. In contrast with the 4 and 6 cent differential for swing and graveyard shifts they have been getting 5 and 10 cents. But what of the large number of steel workers, these with the greatest seniority, who work continuously on the day shift? They receive nothing! Nothing but the "promise" that Murray's "friend" in the White House will some day get around to revising the Little Steel formula.

HOLIDAY CLAUSE

Similarly, the new vacation clause is an improvement over the old one. But there are thousands of steel workers who have been working in steel all their lives who benefit not one bit from this clause. The same with the holiday clause. The union leadership is not one of enthusiasm for Murray's "victory." They are beginning to realize that they must build a rank and file leadership that will fight for the interests of the membership. Many of them, remembering the great strike struggles of the coal miners in 1943 understand that they will get only what they fight for.

Canadian News Letter

By Alexander

For some months now, CCF brain-trusters have been hinting about the preparation and existence of an election manifesto, being prepared as a bombshell for the discomfiture of the old parties, come an election. In the nature of a secret weapon, naturally it was too hot a document to be allowed to circulate freely to the branches. As we write, the Annual Convention of the CCF is taking place in Montreal, and doubtless this earth-shaking manifesto will be produced at last for the benefit of the Canadian Commonwealth Federation delegates.

The capitalists of Canada can stop trembling in their boots. As might be expected, the 4,000-word Election Manifesto is a consistent application of the peculiarly CCF brand of social-reformism. It is distinguished both by its narrow nationalism; its refusal to recognize that the future of Canada, socialist or capitalist, is bound up economically with the rest of the world; and by its ostrich-like attitude to the causes of the present war. In fact, the Manifesto blandly ignores the very existence of the war, apart from its provisions for the rehabilitation of the fighting men.

Because the CCF leadership, Supply Howe is notorious both as a labor-hater and a blunt speaker. His deputy minister is no exception in the latter respect, according to a report circulating around Ottawa.

Said Deputy Minister Sheils to group of his office heads: "We hear a lot of talk about post-war plans and prosperity, but take it from me, we are going to have the biggest depression this country ever heard of."

In these few words, Mr. Sheils ripped all the camouflage off the government's paper plans for the post-war, gave the direct lie to his Prime Minister and Cabinet, all of whom have been busy these last few months painting a rosy picture of Canada's "brave new world."

Steel Barons Howl For Higher Prices After Wage Ruling

With the announcement of the WLB decision in the steel wage case, the steel barons threw into high gear their campaign for higher steel prices. Crying the blues about the "cost" of the miserable crumbs which the WLB dropped to the steel workers, the corporations have begun an immediate clamor for a big price boost on steel products.

Irving S. Olds, U. S. Steel chairman, announced that the "unjustifiable increases" in labor costs could only be met by a steep hike in steel prices. Ernest T. Weir, head of National Steel, proclaimed that the WLB decision "will naturally result in a substantial increase in the cost of making steel."

Their plaints have reached the receptive ear of the Roosevelt administration. Office of Price Administration spokesmen, according to the Associated Press, Nov. 29, have indicated the possibility of "price increases for some steel products."

An OPA spokesman admitted that "we could certify overnight that no price consequences are involved if the cost study is to be on an industry-wide basis" because "the industry's earnings are substantially above those of the base period, 1936-39."

But, he added, "the industry runs 'in the red' on certain items and the companies 'naturally feel' that any survey to determine increased costs should be based on the individual products and not the overall costs. So, OPA spokesmen indicated that the survey may be based on earnings for individual products."

"UNDUE HARDSHIPS"

It was a foregone conclusion that even the slightest wage concession would be used as a pretext by the administration to put through a steel price increase. Last December, in refusing to renew the old union contract while wage negotiations were pending, a steel industry representative declared that whether or not a wage increase were granted, the steel companies still required price increases "if the industry is to survive." (N. Y. Times, Dec. 22, 1943). Roosevelt then assured the steel companies that "undue hardship" occasioned by wage increases "will be given due consideration by the agencies of the government concerned with costs and prices."

Between 1939 and 1944, the steel corporations suffered the following "undue hardship": increased their total assets by $1,107,980,000, or 22.4 per cent; boosted their undistributed profits to $1,035,259,000, or by 74 per cent; added $212,985,000, or 203.2 per cent, to their "reserves"; paid out 60 per cent more in dividends to the coupon clippers.

Stalin Regime And Germany

In an article entitled: "The Odds On A Communist Germany," published in the October issue of "Coronet Magazine," the well-known foreign correspondent Frederick Kuh makes the following significant comments.

"Even if Germany were to embrace communism after the war, it does not follow at all that she would march in step with Russia. We all know that Soviet Communism has undergone great changes since the Bolshevik revolution. The Comintern was dissolved, the orthodox church reinstated. Officer-cadet academies, suppressed when czarism was overthrown, have been reopened. The socialist bastion of State ownership of production and distribution still stands, but if Rip Van Lenin returned he would hardly recognize the old place.

"History suggests that, at the close of the war, German workers and soldiers rebel under the red flag, in the flush of revolution they will strike along the paths of radicalism, perhaps of Trotskyism. A Communist Germany could conceivably pursue policies that would collide with those of Russia today."

Belgian Workers Denounce Puppet Regime

"For the Punishment of the Traitors" reads the placard borne in this November 19 demonstration of workers protesting in Brussels, Belgium, against the British-sponsored Pierlot government. The parade took three quarters of an hour to pass a given point. Since then British troops, acting under orders of General Eisenhower, have fired on similar demonstrations.

Packard Workers Fight KKK Anti-Negro Action

By John Saunders

DETROIT, Mich.—Less than two weeks after a strike over the transfer of several Negro polishers into the final assembly department, the membership of Packard Local 190 UAW-CIO in a splendid demonstration of unity at its monthly meeting on November 19 at Cass High School unanimously passed a resolution branding racial discrimination a tool of "reactionary forces" and insisting on strict adherence to seniority rights "regardless of race or sex." As further evidence that anti-Negro strikes are company-inspired and have the support of only that fraction of the union membership imbued with the Ku Klux Klan ideology, the Packard workers elected Joe Peoples, one of their leading Negro trade unionists, to the local vice-presidency by a vote of about 700 to 400 for the combined total of his two white opponents.

"I do not regard my election as a personal triumph," Peoples modestly volunteered, "but rather as a demonstration that the rank and file workers are desirous of achieving unity against the union-splitting tactics of the Packard Motor Company."

FULL RESPONSIBILITY

Peoples did not hesitate to place full responsibility for the recent flareup at Packard is only the most recent of many similar company-inspired occurrences that have pitted white workers against their Negro brothers thereby endangering the union and undermining conditions in that plant.

WHITE WORKERS

Fearing that the foreman and steward would be forced to continue the Negro workers on the job despite their failure to reach the impossible quotas, a small group of reactionary white workers on the night shift, left their machines on October 30 and the company readily closed down the plant.

The plant did not open until the following Monday, November 6, after the bargaining committee and International officers had reached an agreement with the company. The rather vague agreement permitted the transferred polishers three days to adapt themselves to the new job but allowed them an indeterminate period in which to turn out the required production quota. Under this agreement only about a dozen out of more than 50 Negro polishers are able to hold on to their new jobs. The balance are forced to take bench jobs at a reduction in pay.

Even this rather meager concession was obtained by the Negro workers only after they staged a strike of their own. When the men returned to work on the night shift of November 6, after a week's shutdown, two Negro polishers who had previously refused to accept a reduction in pay were fired by the company despite the new agreement. Only when all the Negro workers in the plant showed that they meant business and walked out of the shop did the company agree to take back the two Negro polishers.

UNION ENDANGERED

The last flareup at Packard is only the most recent of many similar company-inspired occurrences that have pitted white workers against their Negro brothers thereby endangering the union and undermining conditions in that plant.

The Negro workers at Packard fully realize the dangers besetting them and the union and are ever vigilant in defending their rights. Although they comprise only about 12% of the working force their participation at union meetings is especially high, often comprising close to one half of the total attendance. They are also getting the support of the most militant and devoted white trade unionists who are acutely aware of the stratagem of Packard to weaken the union.

Slim was sitting on the bench cross-legged, bending over to tie his shoe laces. It was a tough day. And Slim was tired. "You don't get anywhere working for a living," he said. "Guess I'll get myself educated and be a success in life like Pile-it-high-Patterson."

The fellows snickered. Because Patterson is successful mainly at shooting the bull. It isn't money that Patterson piles high.

Everybody sees through Patterson. He's a phony anyway you look at him—coming, going or sidewise. Everybody knows he's a phony. And nobody turns around when his self-important little pot-belly struts through the shop with a sheaf of pink and yellow papers by its side.

Patterson busies himself here, there and everywhere, doing approximately nothing. He tells you all about the latest contract or the latest cut-back with the air of a man just back from Washington, but he doesn't impress the gang very much.

He's a head clerk, a time study advisor, a staff assistant, a chief expediter or any other fancy title depending on how wise the guy is that he's trying to show under. To most of us he's just a dressed-up stock clerk, and a bull slinger in the bargain.

He spends half his time in the front offices—hobnobbing with superintendents, assistants, and other exalted people. (That's where he picks up his information and good cigar butts.) Some of the fellows think he's a stool pigeon. But he's not. He never says anything bad about anybody. That's because he doesn't really say anything. He's just a glorified peg-sitter.

But the point is that the big shots must be a lot more taken in by him than we are, because they actually pay some attention to what he says. If there's a breakdown in the shop, a shortage of parts or anything like that, Patterson is the one who goes over to the front office to "explain" it.

There are at least thirty fellows in the shop that could tell you more about a machine in five minutes than Patterson could in five days. (And make no mistake—Patterson could talk about it for five days too.) But their advice is never asked. They are only working-men. Besides they don't know how to flatter. They don't know how to light a man's cigar within a twentieth of a second after it gets in his mouth. They don't know how to say "yes" in twenty different tones of voice. These things require finesse.

WHAT KIND OF MEN ARE THEY?

But what about the big shots who can stand that kind of attention? What kind of men are they, anyway? Perhaps they are a superior breed to us guys in the shop because they can stomach this childish crap where we can't? Not by a good big jugful, they're not. They like that sort of thing. Their stupidity has to find an echo. And Pile-it-high Patterson is that echo.

The higher up you go in the corporation, the lower you find the understanding about the plant or the industry. The higher the executive is, the less connection he has with the work, and the more time he uses to spend his profits.

But if their ability to work is lower, their ability to play and sling the bull is nevertheless very high. Where we take fifteen minutes at lunch time and concentrate on our work for eight hours, the big executive does the opposite. Patterson talks all day about contracts, machinery, labor costs, etc. And we don't pay any attention to what he says because he reverses everything the next day anyhow. But the big shots! For eight hours a day, day after day, they talk like a bunch of club women—about their score at golf, their girl friends, how drunk they were the night before, and so on. Next to most of them Pile-it-high Patterson is a model of industry.

Now, ordinarily we're a pretty tolerant bunch. "Live and let live" is about the way we see things. If these executives want to drink up a few acres of rye, get ulcers and liver trouble at an early age, play golf and fish all summer, hunt, ski, and bob-sled for the winter—and tell their brother executives all about it while they "work," and have a dozen Pile-it-high Pattersons listen to them pile it high, and say "yes" at the right intervals—why that doesn't sound so bad.

But the hard fact is that these super phonies—these originals that Patterson is only the copy of—these drips, ARE OUR MASTERS. Their antics are funny if you want to look at it that way. But it's we who have to pay the bill for them. And it's not so funny when you consider that they rule our lives.

The "LABOR WITH A WHITE SKIN CAN NOT EMANCIPATE ITSELF WHERE LABOR WITH A BLACK SKIN IS BRANDED" — KARL MARX.

Negro Struggle

By Charles Jackson

Tasks of the Negro Veterans

The returning Negro veterans of World War II who are starting to trickle back to civilian life should prepare now to play a leading role in the mounting struggle of the Negro people to gain complete equality and economic security.

These men are coming back every day from their terms of imperialist military discipline. They are emerging with a determined will to take battle stations in what is to them the real fight — the fight for full citizenship for the blacks right here in the U. S. A. A fiery militancy has been indelibly branded into their toughened hides by the white hot iron of official Army Jim-Crowism. While many of us here only spoke about it or wrote about it, they are the ones who had to swallow it — that "bitter dose" of government anti-Negroism ladled out in the glittering spoon of national patriotism.

Not only because they are ready to fight, but also because they understand, first hand, the reactionary role of the federal government itself, do we say that the returning Negro veterans will be both willing and able to assume leading posts in the fight for equality.

This added ability, however, simultaneously involves an added responsibility. If we are to achieve our aims, these veterans must understand and apply throughout the fight a correct political program. Many pitfalls have been prepared in the path and the warnings against them cannot be repeated too often.

One thing the Negro veterans as well as the Negro workers must remember is this: We are booked to lose if we conduct the fight on a chauvinistic — or black against white — basis. We remain outnumbered 10 to 1. Such strategy therefore can lead only to disaster. We know, of course, that every act of oppression has been dealt out by someone with a white face. In the Army it was either an enlisted man or civilian who had been taught all his life to look down on the Negro or else a member of the white officer's caste who was carrying out the direct orders of Roosevelt's War Department.

But whether or not you in your own mind can overcome this perfectly natural distrust of every white person, at least you should be able to see that we are too small a minority to win on the narrow basis of color.

In the second place we warn the Negro veteran to always stick by labor as against capital. Negro soldiers, as well as the white, have been told again and again by the capitalist press that workers striking for economic gains at home were giving the "boys at the front" a stab in the back. This is a malicious lie because the working people (including those in uniform) have a definite stake in the class war here, whereas they have nothing to gain from the imperialist war for foreign markets.

Furthermore, the big business interests are playing up the role of the backward trade unions which discriminate against the Negro. We should unalterably oppose such actions and tendencies in the unions, it is true. But we should not generalize from this that all unions are no good. Instead, we must go into these Jim-Crow unions and fight these policies of the reactionary leadership by showing the white worker his personal stake in working-class solidarity.

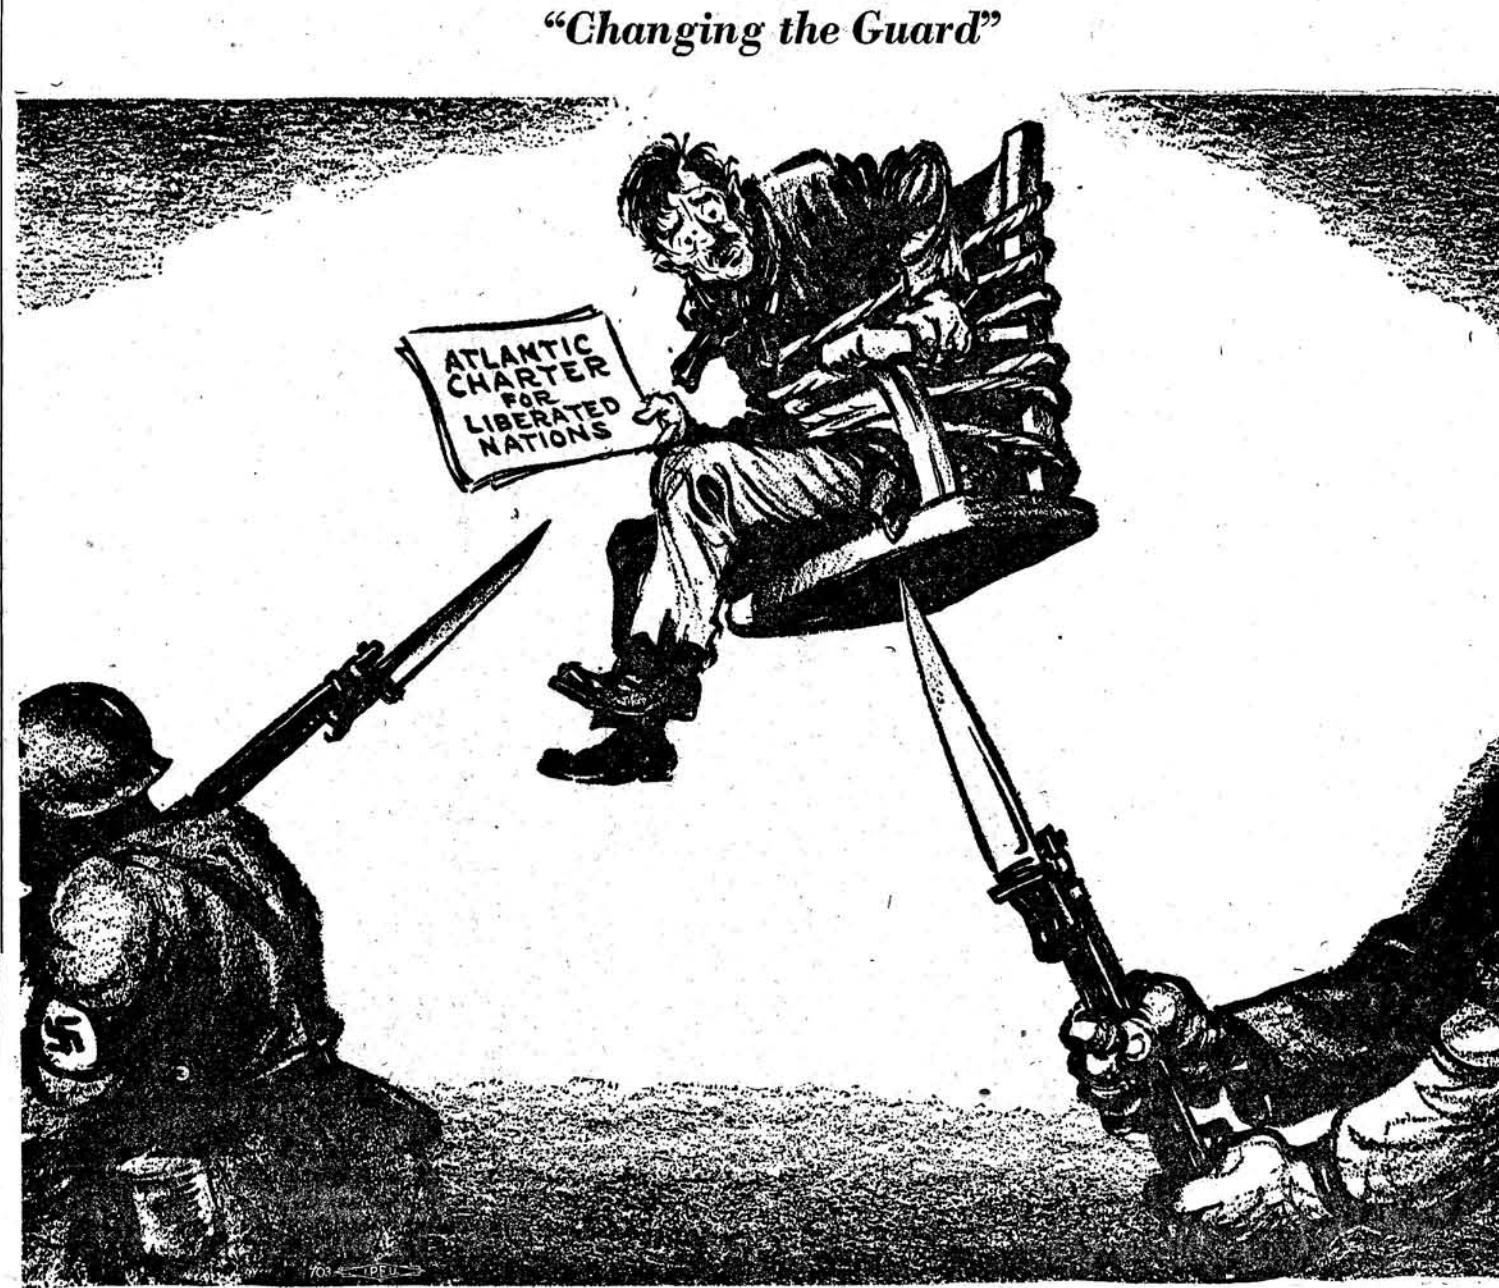

MARXIST EDUCATION

How are the Negro veterans to arm themselves with a complete understanding of all forces involved so that they may help lead their people through to final victory? Only through Marxist education and training which can be obtained only within the party of Revolutionary Socialism. The present trend toward Negro radicalism today presages, of necessity, a swell of thousands on the morrow.

The capitalist economists now have their ears to the ground and can almost hear them trembling in their boots. Professor E. Franklin Frazier, head of the Sociology Department at Howard University, last month complained that Negroes may "be drawn into the radical wing of the labor movement and seek a revolutionary solution of their problem . . . if (if? is he kidding?) if they suffer economic hardships after the war." He stated that particularly the demobilized service men will be less disposed to remain unemployed because of race. "At one time such movements on the part of the Negro could be ignored," continued Frazier, "but in our urban civilization, they offer a serious threat to internal peace (read: capitalist exploitation)."

Yes, the returning Negro soldier who knows the score must take his stand now and prepare for the fight. The program must include militant mass action, mass demonstrations etc. in the struggle for abolition of all forms of governmental Jim-Crow. The aid of all militant groups must be sought out regardless of whether they are black, white or red — especially the support of the progressive trade unions.

As to those who tell us to "take it easy" — they are but Uncle Tom traitors who yesterday subscribed to the psychology of "yassuh boss." The demands of the Negro masses as of today are revolutionary in scope.

PM 'Deplores' Roosevelt Choice Of New State Department Heads

By Art Preis

The professional liberals are going through one of their recurrent bouts of chills and fever. Only a month ago they were hotly-flushed over the "great progressive victory" scored by the re-election of Roosevelt. Now they are shivering in the public prints and tremulously wailing, "Who won the election?"

Most recently, the liberal press has begun to beat its now well-battered breast over Roosevelt's nominations to the key posts in the State Department. Roosevelt has turned the keys of the foreign policy department over to the direct agents of the House of Morgan and Rockefeller. This is most embarrassing to Roosevelt's liberal apologists. It makes it tougher for them to fulfill their function of gilding the faded lilies of imperialist "democracy."

Take the typical case of PM, New York's most vociferous daily pleader for the "common man." Only a few weeks ago PM was bragging it all over town that "her Franklin" liked nothing better than to spend his evenings at home playing parchesi with his liberal cronies. Now PM is blabbing about "Liberals Under FDR In Danger — Who Won The Election?" (December 4), "State Department Tragedy — President Gives Old Deal New Power" (December 5).

THE GOSSIP

When the talk began to circulate about Roosevelt chumming up with the Big Business gang after he nominated Stettinius, Jr. as Secretary of State, PM, November 28, flushed the gossip: even though Stettinius is "a product of big business" and trust Roosevelt to bring out the "good" in him. Yes, PM could stomach Stettinius and even Nelson Rockefeller, the "self-made man" of the Standard Oil trust, as an Assistant Secretary of State.

But when Roosevelt nominated Joseph C. Grew, who favors retaining the Japanese Emperor, as Under Secretary of State and Will Clayton "whose firm helped Nazis fight boycott before war" as Assistant Secretary over foreign economic affairs, then PM went into hysterics. "In the conduct of foreign relations," wailed PM, "President Roosevelt has strengthened the hand of the Old Deal . . . staffing the State Dept. with a crew that would please Metternich."

INNOCENT VICTIM

But PM doesn't blame Roosevelt. He's just a victim of the influence of bad company. The Tragedy of the State Department "centers on the selection of Will Clayton, world-famous cotton magnate and spokesman of monopoly business." So PM starts a campaign to block the appointment of Clayton. "We urge our readers to communicate their views" — to everybody but Franklin Delano Roosevelt who made the appointment!

It's true, PM admits, that there are other people gunning for Clayton, but with less honorable motives. "Some Southern cotton interests are hostile to Clayton" who has been undercutting cotton prices with foreign imports. But these are "motives entirely different from our own." It is perhaps mere coincidence that Marshall Field, multi-millionaire merchant prince and owner of sweat-shop cotton textile mills in the South, is also the owner of PM.

PM illustrates the true role of professional liberalism today. Liberalism, a relatively honest profession in the era of ascending capitalism, has long since degenerated into a dirty racket. The liberals provide the "respectable" front for the slimy business that goes on in the back-rooms of capitalist reaction. They are the hired "character witnesses" for capitalist demagogues like Roosevelt.

Murray Blames WLB Scapegoat In Order To Shield Roosevelt

By Mike Bradic

On November 28 the War Labor Board delivered a new blow at organized labor by upholding the wage-freezing Little Steel Formula and the wage-freeze. By conceding secondary "fringe" demands of the steelworkers, and denying them their 17 cent increase, the WLB, after a year of stalling, has thus denied wage increases to the millions of organized workers whose cases hinged on that of the steel workers. This culminates a series of blows which the WLB has rained on the unions; blows carefully designed to prevent labor from obtaining wage increases commensurate with the rising cost of living.

Chiefly responsible for the sorry plight of the unions is Philip Murray, head of the CIO and the Steelworkers. It is he and his lieutenants who have preached faith in Roosevelt, faith in the WLB. They have pleaded for "patience" and held out glowing promises of "revising" the Little Steel Formula.

What does Murray now have to say about the anti-labor WLB? The Board itself is OK, say Murray, but there is one scoundrel in its midst, George W. Taylor. He should resign. That is what the CIO "chief" announced at the Chicago Convention on November 24. Murray continues to shield Roosevelt, who is primarily responsible for the WLB set-up, and seeks to conceal his own responsibility for deluding the workers into support of the WLB.

BANKRUPT POLICY

Even at this late date, when his whole policy in regard to the WLB has been revealed as bankrupt, Murray singles out one individual as a "scapegoat" in order to continue his support of the WLB. Remove Taylor, replace him with somebody else, and everything will be OK, says the "chief."

Will that win the 17 cents for the steel workers? Nobody is going to be fooled into believing it will. In case anybody has any doubts on the subject, the rest of the "public" members of the WLB have hastened to dispel them. For no sooner did the other public members, Davis, Graham and Garrison, learn of Murray's criticism of Taylor, than they hastened to solidarize themselves with Taylor, and to praise him for having "authorized" the Little Steel Formula. He wrote it and we support it, they declared in effect.

All the "public" members, along with the industry members, stand four-square in support of the wage-freezing Little Steel straight-jacket. No, it's not one rotten apple, the whole barrel is full of rotten apples; the whole set-up is rotten. Assuming, however, that Taylor or some other of the "public" members resign. Then what, Mr. Murray? Should he be replaced by another carefully hand-picked college professor, who in the guise of being "impartial," will deliver new blows at the unions? Or isn't it time that the ranks of labor put an end to this shell game?

No matter who replaces Taylor, it is plain that labor will be sold down the river by the WLB. Pull the labor representatives off, and let the WLB stand exposed for what it is: a boss-controlled agency packed against labor. Pull the labor members off and put an end to the sham which has already cost the unions so dearly. Let's go back to real collective bargaining and relegate the War Labor Board to a museum.

Diary Of A Steel Worker

By Theodore Kovalesky

I saw it happen one day during the last depression. With my own eyes I saw living proof of how the bitter acid of poverty and despair will corrode the personality and cause a man to degenerate into a brute.

It was dusk of a cold, damp, dismal day in late October. A light rain, hardly more than a mist, was drifting down, and the bare, black branches of the trees were beaded with cold moisture. I, as usual, had been making the monotonous and heart-breaking rounds of the employment agencies and factories, hearing everywhere the same impersonal voices mechanically telling me, "Sorry, nothing to day. We'll let you know." Tired, hungry, depressed, and chilled to the bone, I stopped to rest a few moments in the shelter of a doorway.

At first I didn't notice him, for it was getting dark, and I was buried in my own thoughts. I didn't notice the little man digging in the garbage can until the other man came up. The second man was a big guy, thin, ragged and rawboned. You could see that he must have been at one time very powerfully built. He too went up to the garbage can and started to dig into it.

But digging in a garbage can is strictly a one man proposition. If you have ever tried it, you will remember that there is room for only one pair of hands to turn over the contents of the can efficiently and room for only one head to lean over it to inspect the pickings. So there was bound to be a conflict.

The big guy straightened up, put both big hands on the little man's shoulders, and pushed. Whining his righteous indignation, the other ran back to his place at the can and petulantly thrust his hands once more into it. A heavy blow on his cheek sent him reeling back again. His small shoulders sagged. He was defeated. With a whimpering sound he sat down on the curbstone not far from me.

Perhaps I shouldn't have said he was defeated. As I watched him, I could see that he had only suffered a setback. His face had become very shrewd. He never took his crafty eyes away from his enemy. The first battle seldom decides a war, and he was waiting, patiently and craftily.

Finally the big guy straightened up again, his face and manner both showing great satisfaction. In his hands he held some choice morsels that he had picked out of the corruption and filth. Hastily cramming it into his mouth and swallowing it in great gulps, he returned to his treasure hunt.

But suddenly he straightened up for the third time. Now there was no satisfaction. This time in his lean face there was agony, there was misery. He turned quickly from the refuse, took two jerky steps, bent double, and began to vomit.

It's always a horrible thing to see a man vomit, but it's worse when the man's half starved; because then his nearly empty stomach is speedily drained, but with dry, rasping sounds he continues his strained and agonized retching. There is no more food to be thrown up, but still he continues, as though he were trying desperately to disgorge his very life.

As I watched him, I felt sick with disgust and pity. Then I started in sudden horror. The little guy was laughing. He had won! He had waited and won, and this was his moment of triumph.

The big guy heard him. His face hardened, and he took a threatening step in the direction of that mocking laughter. But the misery flooded back into his face, driving the anger away. His whole body sagged. He turned and staggered off into the mist.

The little guy's face held its triumph, but it had turned shrewd again too. He watched the beaten man until he disappeared around a corner.

Then with the leisurely saunter of a man who has plenty of time and nothing to fear, he walked over to the garbage can and began carefully to turn over its contents with his hands.

But, brother, what chilled my heart so, when I saw this happen, was the knowledge that if we were driven far enough, this could happen to you and me.

10 Years Ago In The Militant

DECEMBER 15, 1934

NEW YORK—In its first issue as the official organ of the newly organized Workers Party of America, formed by the fusion of the Communist League (Trotskyist) and the American Workers Party (Musteite), The Militant set forth the 11-point program of action adopted by the party. The program included doubling the party membership within six months, raising a $5,000 Party Foundation Fund, broadening the circulation of the party press, issuing popular pamphlets at regular intervals, a scheduled national tour by James P. Cannon and A. J. Muste, and participating in the building of a strong Non-Partisan Labor Defense Committee.

WASHINGTON—Moving to halt a Senate munitions inquiry, President Roosevelt appointed a committee to "draft laws taking the profit out of war." Pointing out the true reason behind Roosevelt's design, The Militant declared:

"The reason is that the United States Government is definitely preparing for war . . . World War looms. The rulers of all the big nations are bending every nerve in that direction."

Evidence of Roosevelt's intention was seen in his selection of members of the commission: Bernard M. Baruch, Wall Street millionaire and chairman of the War Policies Board during the First World War; General Hugh S. Johnson, creator of the draft plan of World War I; General Douglas MacArthur, Army Chief of Staff, responsible for the shooting of the Bonus Marchers of 1932.

NEW YORK—Harold Robins and Andre Gras, railroaded to prison in April, 1934 for militant activity in the New York hotel strike, were granted a new trial after months of activity on their behalf by the Non-Partisan Labor Defense Committee. "The unanimous decision of the five appeal judges," said The Militant, "criticized the trial judge, Joseph E. Corrigan, for 'sarcastic characterization of the defendants' . . . and for attempting to indicate to the jury the court's opinion that Robins had been employed as a strong arm man by the union."

In an editorial citing the success of the Non-Partisan Labor Defense Committee, The Militant demanded that the Socialist Party give a clear answer as to its attitude toward the Committee. "The Workers Party has put the building of such an organization in its program. It is ready and willing to cooperate with other organizations to build it."

'BOLSHEVISM IS THE UNITY OF THE WORD AND THE DEED'

The entire first phase of the Russian Revolution seems to me today to have been dominated by the utter honesty of Lenin and his group. It was this that attracted all of us to him, regardless of our nationality and our viewpoint. In Spain early in 1917, I discussed the Russian Revolution with a group of militants who were even then talking of seizing Barcelona and setting up a new Commune (one day in July we posted its program on the walls). Salvador Segui, one of the founders of the C.N.T., [Spanish Anarchist organization] questioned me on the subject of Bolshevism, which was fast becoming the world's greatest anxiety and its greatest hope. We were not Marxists, yet in the distorted echoes of Lenin's words that reached us, we could discern a remarkable integrity.

"Bolshevism," I said, "is the unity of word and deed. Lenin's entire unit consists in his will to carry out his program . . . Land to the peasants, factories to the working class, power to those who toil. These words have often been spoken but no one has ever thought seriously of passing from theory to practice. Lenin seems to be on the way . . ."

"You mean," said Segui, bantering and incredulous, "that socialists are going to apply their program? Such a thing has never been seen . . ."

I explained that just this was going to happen in Russia. It required all the ignorance and frivolity of the Western press to imagine that the Russian Revolution could be stabilized on the basis of democratic half-measures, while widespread misery, intensified by the most brutal repression, put before the Russian people all the basic problems: land, peace, power. An inexorable logic drove thousands of men into action, but they needed a clear conception of methods and aims. Would they achieve it? That was the question. The masses do not always at the decisive moment find men capable of expressing unflinchingly their interests, their aspirations, and their power. The cultured classes, that is to say, the propertied classes have plenty of representatives, plenty of conscientious guides and good servants — nor do they hesitate to draw them from the common people if that becomes necessary. The poorer classes are poor in men and that is one of their greatest tragedies.

Bitter Fruit

The election of Roosevelt for a fourth term is so recent that the boasts of Hillman, Murray and their kind over this "victory" still ring in our ears. They claimed labor had decisively defeated reaction and ensured that its friend would remain in charge of government. On top of this, Hillman, Murray and their kind boasted that a progressive Congress had been returned to Washington which would see to it that labor got a fair deal.

It hasn't taken long to harvest the first fruits of this "victory." They prove to be bitter fruit indeed. When the labor heads handed Roosevelt his second term in 1936, it took some six months before he paid off with the notorious "plague on both your houses" which hit the Little Steel strike like a blow from the executioner's axe. In 1944 the blows began within a few days after Roosevelt hung up another four year calendar.

First, (Nov. 18) the War Labor Board reaffirmed its wage-freezing policy. Then (Nov. 25) the WLB specifically rejected the demands of the steel workers for a wage adjustment which had been pending for almost a year. Before the election, when the steel workers wanted to put pressure on the WLB, Murray put them off with the assurance that their "friend" Roosevelt would grant them the necessary adjustment after he got the extra four years.

Secondly, (Nov. 21) Roosevelt renewed Wall Street's drive for a national labor service act. Such legislation, shackling workers to the job in military fashion, follows the pattern laid down by Hitler and Mussolini. Roosevelt launched this new drive with a vicious attack on workers shifting jobs who allegedly were "costing American lives on the battle fronts because it was necessary to ration shells hurled at the enemy." Since then, the press has revealed that no rationing or sabotage of shells exists now, and if there should be possible future shortages, fault lies with those conducting the war, who have ordered cut-backs, reconversion and closing of armament plants.

Thirdly, (Nov. 17) Roosevelt renewed his campaign for a national compulsory military training act designed to Prussianize the United States. Fourthly, (Nov. 25) Roosevelt reorganized the State Department, reshuffling personnel and even creating new posts, in order to place Wall Street's spokesmen in direct charge of the foreign policy of the United States. Stettinius, a well-known overseer of the House of Morgan, was made Secretary of State. As if this were not enough, Roosevelt appointed one of the Rockefellers to work side by side with the Morgan henchman.

Twenty-five years ago, it would have been enough to be seen in public with a Rockefeller or member of the House of Morgan to have seriously compromised a politician. To appoint one of the robber barons to important public office would have sealed even a president's political fate.

Today, however, the ruling aristocracy, playing for world-wide stakes and feeling safe enough under cover of the war excitement to risk a few scandals, are taking over the most important posts for themselves.

A few weeks were thus sufficient to disclose the first fruits of the remarkable victory of Hillman and Murray—these labor lieutenants in the service of Wall Street. With such bitter fruit to begin with, what can labor expect during the next four years?

Churchill's Puppets

The Allied Commission on December 10 officially approved the list of candidates submitted by Premier Bonomi for his second cabinet. The American and British conquerors in this way underlined once more the utter absence of democracy in the regime they are imposing on prostrate Italy.

First requirement demanded of every candidate was unconditional acceptance of the shameful terms of the secret peace treaty forced on Italy by the Allies.

Even this list of Quislings was first combed by the British before Bonomi was permitted to submit it for approval and the name of Count Sforza, head of the Fascist Purge Commission struck off as "inacceptable" to British imperialism.

After the British and American conquerors had unofficially checked the list it was submitted to Crown Prince Humbert who went through the farce of acting as the legally constituted government of Italy by penciling an OK after each name.

The crisis of the Bonomi regime resulted from the deliberate plot to strengthen the monarchy in Italy as the pivot of the Allied puppet government. When Bonomi resigned following a provocative article on the monarchy written by the reactionary correspondent of the N. Y. Times, the Allied-sponsored premier presented his resignation not to the Committee of National Liberation but to Crown Prince Humbert.

This move was calculated to establish the monarchy as the stable part of the puppet government. For this reason, the "Socialist" party and the Action party did not follow the Stalinists in placing their names on the list of candidates for Italian Quislings.

If it is possible to differentiate degrees of reaction in a reactionary puppet set-up, then the second Bonomi cabinet can be classified as more reactionary than the first one.

Military Training

Some months before the last presidential election, Congressional committees began planning of legislation on compulsory military training that will affect the character of the nation for decades to come. Yet the issue of compulsory military training dropped completely out of the press while the Republicans and Democrats conducted their sham public battle over "issues."

Compulsory military training was one of those real issues neither party dared to place before the voters. Nevertheless it is precisely the kind of issue that must be left to the people to decide if genuine democracy is to be observed.

Now that the election has "safely" been passed, the House Committee on Post-War Military Policy has announced through its Chairman, Woodrum, that the plans are going forward for legislation to militarize American youth. The proposed military training system will not follow the lines of the Civilian Conservation Corps camps or the National Youth Administration. As representative Wadsworth, co-author of the Selective Service Act and one of the public sponsors of this legislation puts it, Congress will not "set out to raise and maintain civic groups."

These cynical words, like the silence of the capitalist parties during election, betray the real sinister purpose of the proposed legislation. Wall Street envisions domination of the entire world. Maintenance of that imperial position requires armies numbered in the millions, with tens of millions of trained men in reserve. Wall Street consequently intends to Prussianize American youth. Wall Street intends to make the military uniform a permanent fixture of the educational system. We have entered the era when the military will dominate every phase of life in the United States.

All important problems of humanity will be solved eventually arms in hand. It would be stupid, therefore, on the part of labor to simply oppose compulsory military training. The working class must call for military training. But the interests of the labor movement call for military training under its own control instead of the control of Wall Street. Only by taking military training out of the hands of martinetts culled from the ranks of reaction and placing it in the hands of the labor movement, will the masses be able to protect their own interests.

That is why we oppose the military training schemes of Wall Street. We call for military training, but under the control of the trade unions.

Steel Wage Decision

Editor:

There is much disgust and resentment in our plant over the WLB decision in the steel wage case. Many men are so fed up with all the stalling and buck-passing of the WLB, and the bad plant conditions, they feel the Union has let them down. Now, one of the things the WLB did was to give a 15 day "escape clause" from maintenance of membership in the Union.

Last week, the Company posted notices all over the plant quoting from this section of the WLB directive, that union members have 15 days to present written notice if they want to quit the Union. I have heard many men, even good union-conscious men, grumble and even say they are going to quit.

One thing about this "escape clause"—now when Murray got the check-off and the Company started mailing the dues direct to the National Office, then grievances piled up all over the place and there was no way the men could put any pressure on the staff Representatives. I think Murray made a deal to give up the strike weapon in exchange for getting the dues collected regularly. Now not only don't we get important grievances settled, and don't get our 17c, but Murray's lousy policies are beginning to boomerang on him.

Jobs

Editor:

We notice one thing that is making us a little angry, and that is the fact that we are looked on as potential problems and menaces. Social workers are beginning to talk of the maladjusted returning soldiers. Eleanor Roosevelt advocates a six-week course to train us how to act in civilian society. The fear goes as follows: these men are used to bloodshed, to violence, they are potentially dangerous.

Most soldiers want to get home as quickly as possible. It is true that ex-soldiers formed an important bulwark of many fascist movements. But that was due to the conditions at home, they came home to a jobless, hungry set-up. If we return to jobs, no adjustment schools will be necessary, the adjustment will be easy. But if there are no jobs, there'll be difficulties.

Someone should debunk this self-imposed hysteria. We are not monsters, but men who want to go home and take up our lives. Someone should put in a defense of the soldiers. The adjustment will be no problem at all for 9999 out of each 10,000, if there is work. But that is a big "if." If there is no work, or few jobs, the returned soldiers will undoubtedly put in a claim and demand the jobs. This may cause the trouble, but not the psychological problem. We are not semi-psychopaths. If one out of every 10,000 soldiers commits a crime, it doesn't make a "problem" out of the other 9,999. I have been reinforced in my opinion of the case of adaptation of the human being through my army experience. The basic problem is economic, not psychological.

Cut Backs

Editor:

Already the axe has fallen. Cutbacks in Detroit alone number 74,800. A few have been able to find jobs; the rest are still looking in spite of the War Manpower Commission's announcement that there is a shortage. Good jobs are scarce and those who do find them go through miles of red tape and hours of waiting.

In the present set-up where the workers must go through the United States Employment Service, they are sent to so-called priority factories. This is but a means of forcing the workers into jobs that are not wanted by others and that no-one would ordinarily take. This lowers the standards of the workers by forcing them to accept jobs at beginners' wages.

It is no longer possible to take a job without the sanction of the USES. The workers are sent to the big plants with the belief that they will be hired in their highest ratings. After hours of waiting in the cold or on hard benches you are made to understand the company is doing you a favor by bothering with you at all. You are told that there aren't any openings in your trade; the only openings are for a labor hand.

Seventy-five percent of those applying at USES are Negroes and of the total number applying sixty-five percent are women. The axe falls on them more sharply. Lay-offs are occurring every day for women and Negroes on some pretext or other. What does the union plant committee do? Their hands are tied by the no-strike pledge. With the fear of being victimized they no longer fight as militantly as they used to.

G. I. Joe

Editor:

I have been burning up for a long time about the title the press gives to the fellows in the army — "G.I. Joe." I used to be in the army years ago. And the phrase "G.I." definitely did not mean anything good. I don't know just how the boys feel about it now, but I'll tell you how I feel, and what G.I. Joe means to me.

In the first place G.I. stands for "government issue." Everything that doesn't fit is "government issue" — you get the post tailor to make you look human. Garbage cans are "G.I. cans" because they stink. A real short military haircut is a "G. I. haircut" because it makes you look like a prisoner. The captain has plain black "G.I. furniture" in his quarters until he marries some money. Then he puts it down cellar and brings in the chippendale.

G.I. Joe is not an officer. Of course not. An officer is tailor made, not "government issue." G.I. Joe is lower class — the butt of jokes — a dope who hasn't made the grade. An officer is a gentleman by act of Congress, no less! Did you ever hear of a gentleman named Joe? Oh sure, Joe is a great guy, heart of gold, brave as a lion and all that. But he's just the unthinking obeyer of commands. He has to have an officer tell him what to think.

They call "G.I. Joe" a hero too, in their condescending way. When the heroes go out of camp looking for an extra drink, they're out of bounds. And the M.P.s run them in. But the "G.I." sentry who's posted near the officer's club on Saturday night sees the gold braid stagger out with more than he can carry.

But the worst insult, and the lowest, I think, is the dirty gibe I see week after week in that "liberal" paper PM. They run a series of genteel, slightly deodorized pin-up girls, and underneath them the mocking refrain, "O.K. Joe." I can imagine what a guy would feel like a thousand miles from nowhere in his tent at night — looking at a picture of some night club queen. It's bad enough that he can't see any live girls at all — much less the girl he left behind. So he looks at this night club babe who makes two or three hundred a week and hands out photos to keep up the boys' morale. He likes the picture. Yet he hates it because it reminds him of something he can't have.

False Propaganda

Editor:

I would like very much to see an article in your paper showing the falseness of the propaganda that Germans and Japanese are innately brutal and savage. It is unfortunately true that many people believe this and come to the conclusion that these nations must be destroyed.

INTERNATIONAL NOTES

Portugal

The November 17 British Tribune presents the following graphic picture of labor unrest in Portugal based upon information from the International Transport Workers' Federation.

In the jails and concentration camps of the Cape Verde Islands, the Salazar regime still holds as prisoners the workers who led the three strike movements in August 1943, at the turn of the year 1943-1944, and in the spring of 1944. The Greenshirts of the Fascist Legions prowl in factories and working class districts. Yet the regime has recently made preparations which show that it fears new labor unrest.

The workers of Portugal have scarcely ever known good times, and since 1926, under the thumb of Salazar's Estado Novo (New State), they have been deprived of every opportunity of trade union or co-operative self-defense. There exist, indeed, State labor organizations of the compulsory type, but they are no more than contribution-collecting bodies. It's the rarest of occurrences for a worker to hear of a members' meeting and no trade union journal reaches him. The secretaries of these pseudo-unions are carefully selected. Before their appointment, candidates must obtain certificates of consent from the appropriate employers' organization, the police authorities and the Labor Ministry. Needless to say that those securing an appointment do not stand up for workers' interests against the employers and the State.

That is why we oppose the military training schemes of Wall Street. We call for military training, but under the control of the trade unions.

The strikes of August 1943 had, finally compelled the regime to introduce food rationing. In the few large towns of the country bread, olive oil, dried cod, rice, macaroni, sugar and soap are now rationed. Outside the big towns only olive oil, soap, petroleum (for cooking and lighting) and sugar have been rationed. Meat and butter are not rationed, but workers, who can hardly afford the dried cod — which besides olive oil is the staple foodstuff of Portugal — cannot buy them. Many districts olive oil is unobtainable for weeks at a stretch.

Under the pressure of labor unrest the Government has ordered employers to pay cost of living allowances, and has even laid down minimum wages for a wide range of industries. At the same time, however, prices rose far more steeply. Tuberculosis is rampant — a symptom of the terrible malnutrition of the masses. Clandestine leaflets and news-sheets circulate in Portugal. But the great majority of the workers are illiterate. Owing to the wretchedly low wages, working-class families must send even young children of seven or eight years out to work, vending newspapers, running errands, or other jobs. 70 to 80 percent of the Portuguese population are illiterate.

But radio and the "whisper press" reach also the illiterate. News of important happenings spreads very rapidly. The Spanish struggle, the fall of Mussolini, the liberation of Paris caused great excitement throughout the country. The fall of Mussolini was followed by the mass strikes of August 1943, and it was only ruthless police terror which quelled a mass movement after the liberation of the French capital.

Since the spring of 1944 Salazar's Greenshirt Legion has been staging demonstrations designed to intimidate the people. Anti-air-raid drill is organized, the streets are cordoned off by heavily armed Legionnaires, so that the public may see the modern war weapons with which they are armed — supplied by the Allies.

Yet the regime is uneasy. Twice, in August and December 1943, it ordered the arrest of all workers suspected of being leaders of labor resistance. These men are still under arrest. Nevertheless, new disorders occurred in May 1944. The regime realizes that in spite of the arrests the workers have found new leaders. The masses look hopefully across the frontiers and await an opportunity of throwing off the imperialists.

Salazar and his gang of cut-throats and capitalists also look across the frontiers to their allies, Roosevelt and Churchill, hoping that the Anglo-American imperialists will help to save their threatened dictatorship from the wrath of the masses.

Rent Hogs Lobby Seeks To Smash OPA Controls

Lobbyists for the big landlord and real estate interests are hammering away at the rent control regulations of the OPA in an attempt to put over an estimated half-billion dollar grab in increased rentals. The greedy realtors are using the special Smith Committee in the House as the instrument for pushing through abandonment of the few existing OPA rent regulations.

This committee, headed by Virginia's Democratic Poll-Tax Congressman Howard W. Smith, author of the anti-labor Smith "Gag" Act and Smith-Connally Anti-Strike Bill, has been attempting to pressure OPA's rent control division into removing a regulation prohibiting landlords from collecting more than one month's rent in advance.

Throughout the country, especially in areas where housing conditions are very bad due to the heavy migration of war workers, the landlords have been securing hidden rent increases by exacting large "deposits" from new tenants for "breakage" and "damages." As recently reported by CIO United Automobile Workers President R. J. Thomas, many Detroit war workers have been muled out of hundreds of dollars each by this practice.
