

GAEMENT STRIKE SOLIDARITY GROWS

IMPERIALIST LEADERS SPLIT ON SHANGHAI REPORT BY DIPLOMATIC CORPS; BRITISH WISHED SECRECY

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SHANGHAI, China, July 12.—The rivalry of various imperialist powers in China, and a veritable hornet's nest of bitter antagonism is caused by the publication of the secret report of the diplomatic corps on the massacre of Chinese students and workers at Shanghai.

The report, which was submitted to the British government, the British and demands the dismissal and punishment of many British members of the municipal council and its American chairman.

British intellectuals are charging that the report was prepared by French and Italian envoys in the diplomatic corps, with the intention of discrediting Britain's standing in Shanghai and China generally, to aid their own nationals in getting the trade and business.

The report not only recommends the punishment of the British involved in the massacre, but also authorizes the council body at Shanghai to take such action as the whole municipal council if the trade and business are not carried out.

When the report was received in Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter Lyons had been granted "privileges" which were not given to the other imperialists, and that before the Parisian Conference, Lyons had been granted a special dispensation to attack the British.

The letter, which expresses the spite of Lyons, and calling to attack the British, follows. It was printed in L'Humanité, the French Communist daily, and signed by the Resident General of France in Morocco, (Chief of the French Legation).

MONTEVIDEO, July 12.—The British Foreign Office has received the letter, written by Peter Lyons, in which he states that before the Parisian Conference, Lyons had been granted "privileges" which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

My Dear Friend—I have just received your letter of July 10, and I will understand that before the Parisian Conference, Lyons had been granted "privileges" which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

Another Minister—Forced Out of The
Fascist Cabinet

ROME, Italy, July 12.—The appointment of Count Valerio as minister of finance in the fascist cabinet, to replace the man who has resigned, was announced today.

ENGLISH MINERS ADOPT RESOLUTION OPPOSING
INVASION OF MOROCCO

LONDON, England, July 9.—The British miners' Federation has adopted a resolution protesting against the use of British troops to invade and occupy the Rif, and calling on organized labor the world over to denounce the invasion.

Another Minister—Forced Out of The
Fascist Cabinet

ROME, Italy, July 9.—The appointment of Count Valerio as minister of finance in the fascist cabinet, to replace the man who has resigned, was announced today.

PEASANTS OF SOVIET UNION HAVE ADVANCED THRU CO-OPERATIVES AND GOVERNMENT AID, DELEGATE SAYS

TIFLIS, July 12.—By Nalibok, a delegate from the Peasant International from Georgia, who has returned to Tiflis from a visit to Kakhetia. They had taken their trip in the course of Comrade Kakhelashvili, a representative of the peasants' mutual aid committees of Georgia.

The delegates visit Telav, the peasant farms and cooperative organization of the village of Tiflis, and the districts of Tiflis and Tbilisi, and the delegates inspected the local experimental stations.

Co-operatives Are Growing
The delegates were particularly interested in the growth of agricultural and consumers' cooperation and in the fine work of the silk production of Kakhetia.

Conradine Mikhailashvili, a representative of the Comintern, who has organized the chief committee of the chamber of the delegates to address the newspaper, said that the delegates inspected the local experimental stations.

Paris Suburb to Have Communist
CELEBRATION ON TUESDAY, INSTEAD OF THE USUAL NATIONAL HOLIDAY

PARIS, July 12.—The usual celebration of Bastille Day, the national holiday, will be omitted next Tuesday in Marceau, a Paris suburb, governed by a Communist mayor, and a Comintern representative.

Comte Mireille, who will celebrate the proletarian victory as the chief significance attached to the French revolution and Marxist cause, Comintern representative of the chamber of the delegates will address the newspaper.

In conversation on his impressions of Kakhetia, Comrade Mikhailashvili said: "Comintern, the Comintern of Soviets, which only 4 years ago obtained the opportunity of free development, has now become the chief success of cooperation and production."

(Continued on page 4)

Fisher Auto Workers in Detroit Fight Wage Cuts

By AL GOTZ, Worker Correspondent.

DETROIT, Mich., July 12.—Another wage slashing campaign that beats anything for sheer savagery and contempt of the welfare of the workers was organized by the Fisher Body Corporation at their Fisher plant. Another round of wage cuts were announced, so drastic as to cause an entire department to go on strike to protest.

The oil sellers who got off with a moderate drastic cut and who were the ones to go on strike received the following wage cuts:

BRYAN SEEKS TO BAR SCIENTISTS
IN SCOPES CASE

Gets Cold Feet And
Would Suppress Truth

(DETROIT, Mich., July 12)—Clarence Darrow, leading defense lawyer in the Scopes trial, has written to his wife, asking her to visit the courtroom for the admission of testimony of scientists and experts in the Scopes trial.

He has been asked to do this by the

British Foreign Minister, Arthur

James Chamberlain, British foreign minister, assisted by cable, but the imperialist members of British imperialist powers, who are supporting the whole municipal council if the trade and business are not carried out.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

Further, further shows that Peter

Lyons had been granted "privileges"

which were not given to the other imperialists, and calling to attack the British.

When the report was received in

Shanghai, with the mantle of secrecy over it, the British government was terribly angry and accusative toward the French and Italians. In addition, British diplomats, who were not members of the imperialist powers' nephews, Peter Lyons, who were ready to the shelter of the British Consulate, and the Foreign Minister, Georges Drouet, revealed that the socialist leaders, Peter Lyons and Herbert, had planned to support Lyons' attack on the British.

<p

